Highlights from 2017

SVCF believes that our community's most important problems of housing, transportation, early childhood education and immigration cannot be solved by making grants alone, but require building public will to change public policy.

- Our first On the Table event engaged 7,000 residents in over 700 conversations throughout Silicon Valley about the impact of the housing crisis on all segments of our community.
- Our Choose Children initiative convened California gubernatorial candidates to discuss their dedication to supporting early childhood development. A total of 44 percent of third graders in Silicon Valley do not read at grade level; 74 percent of African American and Latino third graders in Silicon Valley do not.
- We were among the first organizations to support a series of housing bills later signed by Gov. Jerry Brown to increase the supply of housing statewide.
- We continued to champion the rights of immigrants by partnering with Santa Clara County to protect DACA students; we supported statewide legislative efforts to ensure immigrants can access legal services.
